The next problem we are seeing is with engine externals. With the introduction of the GT Bentley embraced a manufacturing process that involved building up the complete engine and then raising it into the car from below. The fit is so tight that some simple-sounding repairs now require engine removal.

What's this? A Bentley Continental GT Convertible, or GTC in shorthand, only one that has been downsized in terms of motive power. It's a move which Bentley has performed many a time before, of course, so don't be disappointed that the 635hp 6.0-litre W12 engine has been disposed of in favour of a 550hp 4.0-litre V8: it's something which has already happened within the ranks of the Bentayga SUV ...
