Many lives were ruined during this shameful time in American history. We do not know how Elizabeth Speare felt about this "witch hunt"; we only know what she wrote, and The Witch of Blackbird Pond stands squarely against bigotry and intolerance and in favor of acceptance, justice, and respect.

The Witch of Blackbird Pond is set in and around Wethersfield, Connecticut: a town in Hartford County on the Connecticut River. The town really was founded by Puritans, who really were a group of religious radicals expelled from England and Holland due to their rather obnoxious habit of forcing their religious opinions and preferences onto others.

My autumn witch-a-thon continues with The Witch of Blackbird Pond, the Newbery Medal winning novel by Elizabeth George Speare. Published in 1958, I gather this is required reading in some public schools; The Bookman in Orange carries new copies, while a buddy of mine named Steve Green at McClain's Coffeehouse in Fullerton caught me reading ...

Gay-Neck: the Story of a Pigeon won the Newbery Medal for excellence in American children's literature in 1928. It deals with the life of Gay-Neck, a prized Indian pigeon. Mukerji wrote that "the message implicit in the book is that man and winged animals are brothers." He stated that much of the book is based on his boyhood experiences with a flock of forty pigeons and their leader, as the boy in the book is Mukerji himself. The book offers an insight into the life of a boy of high caste and also into the training of pigeons. Several chapters are told from Gay-Neck's perspective, with the pigeon speaking in first person.

The only child of King Mark of Cornwall, Juniper enjoys the easy and luxurious life of a medieval princess. But when presented with the opportunity to learn about herbs, healing and the magic of nature, Juniper chooses the difficult route and becomes an apprentice. With the kingdom in peril, will Juniper have the skill to save her people?

Although many try to force from the wise woman the secret of her wisdom, the truth is made clear only to a young girl who shows the capacity for wandering and wondering.
